

BUSINESS SHOWS AN IMPROVEMENT, SAYS ROBERTSON

Westinghouse Representative
Tells of Comeback
Being Staged

"A LITTLE STREAKY"

Says 89 Industries Report An Increase in Employment, 8 1/2%

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 28.—(INS)—
"Business? Well, it's a little streaky but, generally speaking, it is showing a gradual improvement. I think business is slowly staging a comeback."

A. W. Robertson, of Pittsburgh, chairman of the board of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company and head of the National Committee on Industrial Rehabilitation, made these assertions in an interview in his office here today.

"Since November 8 we have been trying to find out just what the election did in the way of affecting business," said Robertson. "I would say, judging from reports we have received, that business while somewhat streaky is on the whole improving.
One business man, pessimistic about the delay he anticipates following an election, insists there has been a distinct sag."

"But I don't believe statistics bear out that point of view. On the contrary, most businesses are now holding their own or showing slight increases."

"The biggest index to the situation is employment. It is significant that eighty-nine manufacturing industries
now report an increase of 8 1/2 per cent
in employment over last July."

Robertson told how manufacturing companies and other business organizations, taking advantage of the present low cost of labor and material, are now expending large sums for plant rehabilitation and restocking of inventories. In all, more than $70,000,000 will be expended by the companies which have so far reported to the committee.

In the Pittsburgh area, where certain industries are lagging, the sum of $6,000,000 will be spent. Robertson's own company, Westinghouse, will spend $1,250,000, he said. Other Pittsburgh companies spending sums from $100,000 to $1,000,000 are National Steel and Pittsburgh Plate Glass.

"Financial and credit conditions are clearly and positively better," said Robertson. "Prices of everything are ridiculously low. Labor is more efficient than ever before."

"The time is ripe to move forward in a business way. The panicky fear over the threat of a possible collapse
of our credit and money institutions, which was at its height last June, has entirely disappeared. Since June there has been a slow, steady improvement in many lines. Other businesses, now lagging, will follow. Our committee feels that it can now conscientiously advise all business men that this is a safe time for them to expend money
on improving their plants on the expectation of capitalizing on such improvement in the near future as business becomes better."

WANT ARNWINE TO PAY

Newtown, Nov. 28.—"The electric chair is too good for him." That was the statement today of Mrs. Charles Rempfer, mother of slain Frances Rempfer, 15-year-old attractive high school student whose body was found late Saturday in the woods near here, as she joined with others in asserting that they wanted no mercy shown her daughter's slayer.

Charles Arnwine confessed the murder, according to police.

"When he said Frances's
mother or myself mistreated
her he is lying," the father said.
"He deserves no pity, no pity at all," Rempfer added. "If it is the last thing I do, I am going to see this man pays with his life for the murder of my daughter. I am not a vindictive man, but I want to see justice done,"
he declared.

Funeral services for the slain girl will be held Thursday aftereffect, the sleeves long and tight-fitting and the skirt instep length. Her veil of tulle and lace was cap effect,

and held in place with orange blossoms on either side. She carried an arm bouquet of white "mums."

Miss Vergantino wore a frock of orchid satin, sleeveless and featured decolette neck lines front and back.
Her hat was a picture model of pale blue horsehair, trimmed with orchid toned maline. With this, the bridesmaid wore blue satin slippers
and carried orchid "mums."

The flower girl, who carried a basket of orchid and white toned chrysanthemums, was garbed in pale green crepe de chine, and wore satin ribbon
bandeau of matching shade.

The ring bearer was clad in a blue serge suit with long trousers and carried the ring on a heart shaped white satin pillow.

Preceding the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Longhitano were hosts to 100 guests at dinner and following the nuptials, a reception and dance were tendered the couple and friends by the bride's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Micalizzi left Saturday evening for their home in Bridgeport,

Williams Granted New Trial for Murder

Philadelphia, Nov. 28.—Harold E.
Williams, Bucks County farmer, twice convicted of the murder of his sister's husband, William F. Prophet and twice sentenced to death, obtained a new trial today by action of the State Supreme Court, reversing the Court of Oyer and Terminer.

Mrs. Clara Grace Prophet, wife of the slain man, is now serving a life
term for her part in the crime.

Prophet was shot to death at his home here November 23, 1930.

The Appellate Court's opinion written by Chief Justice Frazer bases the granting of a new trial largely on the remarks contained in the summing up arguments by Assistant District Attorney Vincent A. Carroll in the trial of the case before a jury in the lower court.

The higher court holds that in the matter of expert witnesses by the defense on the question of sanity, Assistant District Attorney Carroll sought to have the jury understand that the defense of insanity and self-defense had been abandoned and that Samuel Moyerman, attorney for Williams, was seeking to reduce the penalty from the electric chair to life imprisonment.
The prosecuting attorney inferred strongly, according to the higher court's opinion, that if the jury fixed the penalty at death, there was every likelihood the Pardon Board would spare the defendant's life.

MORRISVILLE BANKER ENDS LIFE WITH BULLET

Ill Health Blamed for Suicide
of Philip A. Case,
Morrisville

ACTIVE IN CIVIC AFFAIRS

MORRISVILLE, Nov. 28.—Philip A.
Case, 65, member of an old Bucks County family and son of the late Dr.
William E. Case and Martha Price
Case, committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself in the head at his home, 97 North Delmor-r avenue. He is survived by his widow, Anna Maxwell Case; daughter, Mrs.
Martha Hebsacker, and granddaughter,
Margaret Anna Hebsacker.

The body was found lying upon the floor of the bedroom with a revolver beside it.

Friends of Case declared that the act was undoubtedly caused by ill-health and despondency. He had been in poor health for the past few years,
and had at various times found it necessary to ask for leaves of absence from the Morrisville Trust Company, of which he was vice president, director and trust officer.

Besides his connection with the bank, Case had been prominent for many years in civic and business life.
He was a member and former president of the Morrisville Chamber of Commerce, a director of the Mechanics Mutual Building & Loan Association, a member and former trustee of the Morrisville Presbyterian Church,
treasurer of the Morrisville Cemetery Association and a member of the old firm of Case, Rose & Case, wholesale grocers, of Trenton.

Services will be held at his late home, on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock. Friends may view the body tomorrow night between 7 and 9 o'clock.

Robert Ruehl, Jr., Cedar street, was a guest over the week-end of his grandmother, Mrs. Josephine Chambers, Trenton, N. J.

MURDERED

FRANCES REMPFER,
15, Newtown high school
sophomore, who was murdered November 13th, in Double Woods, one mile
from her home, by Charles Arnwine, 26, according to his confession made in the office of District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, at Doylestown, yesterday.
Arnwine, and the girl
were in love with each other, according to the self-confessed murderer.

THOMAS H. SNELSON BURIED HERE SUNDAY

Large Company of Relatives and Friends Pay Last Respects

CHOIR, GLEE CLUB SING

Thomas H. Snelson, a well-known Bristol figure, who died at his residence, 402 Radcliffe street, Wednesday evening, after a lengthy illness, was laid to rest in Bristol Cemetery yesterday afternoon.

The late Mr. Snelson, who came to the United States from England in 1889, was leader of the choir of Bristol Presbyterian Church, and associated with the Bunting Motor Express Company.

The funeral service was held in the Bristol Presbyterian Church, with the Rev. S. Brooks Knowlton, pastor; and the Rev. Francis H. Smith, rector of Fallsington P. E. Church, and chaplain of Bristol Lodge, 970, B. P. O. E., of which the deceased was a member,
officiating.

A large company of relatives and friends, including the Bristol Glee Club which the late Mr. Snelson formed, and the choir which he directed, attended the services. The Glee Club sang, "Crossing the Bar"; and the choral selection was "Bend Thine My Will." The Rev. Russell Johnson
as soloist, and duet part by Mrs. Johnson and C. Melvin Johnson. Mrs. Marburg D. Weagley, organist, accompanied the choir, and previous to the service played favorite hymns of the deceased.

"The Lord gave, the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord," quoted the Rev. Knowlton, who continued with the 23rd Psalm, and other comforting Scriptural passages.

The Rev. Smith referred to the one mourned as "A loved one broken loose from the tenement of clay, and gone to be with Thee." Continuing he read a portion of the fourth chapter of First Thessalonians: "But I would not have you to be ignorant concerning them which are asleep; that ye sorrow
not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."

Many friends called at the Snelson
home throughout Saturday evening,
while many more passed by the flower-banked casket in the church reception room previous to the service yesterday afternoon.

Nearly 30 automobiles were in the funeral cortege as it made its way to Bristol Cemetery where interment was made under direction of the H. S. Rue Estate, undertakers. The Rev. Knowlton conducted the burial service.

Pallbearers were: Albert Snelson,
Jr., Richard Snelson, Jr., Thomas H.
Snelson, William H. Burrows, Henry
Knight, and Charles Bunting.

The late Mr. Snelson who had made his home in Bristol for the past 32 years, is survived by his wife, Mary Snelson; two sons, Ralph and Fred, Morrisville; one sister, Mrs. Charlotte
Doane, Philadelphia; four brothers,
Richard, Jersey City; Albert, Brook-
lawn; Sidney, Palmyra, N. J.; Herbert, Doylestown.

Interest and activity in musical circles had made for the deceased many friends by whom he will be greatly missed. He had been director of the Presbyterian choir here for 30 years.

CONFESSES KILLING SCHOOL GIRL IN SUICIDE PACT

Charles Arnwine, Newtown, Says He Lost Nerve and Didn't Kill Himself

KISSED HER GOOD-BYE

Confesses to Deed After Hours of Grilling by Police

(By Staff Correspondent)

NEWTOWN, Nov. 28.—Within 24 hours to the minute from the time the body of an attractive brunette Newtown high school sophomore girl had been found in a woods, about a mile from her home, her whereabouts for the past two weeks had been learned and the mystery of how she came to her death had been solved. The man suspected of being the cause of her death confessed.

Thus Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo, State Police and cooperating agencies established another record in the solution of crime in Bucks County.

The dead girl, Frances Rempfer, 15,
Court street, Newtown, was murdered
November 13th, according to the man confessing the crime, Charles Arnwine, 25, Newtown foundryman. Arnwine has been twice married. He was divorced from his first wife and does not reside with his second wife.
There are two children. Neither the children nor either of the wives reside here.

Arnwine today will be formally served with a warrant charging him with the murder. He will be given a hearing before a justice of peace and held without bail for court.

The body of Frances Rempfer was found late Saturday afternoon in Double Woods, on the farm of Louis Satterthwaite, Newtown Township, one mile from the home of the girl, here.
The gruesome discovery was made by Boyd Hutchinson, who as a member of a posse of citizens and State Police organized by Detective Russo, went over every inch of ground in the woods in their search for the body.

Arnwine in his confession which followed a number of conflicting statements made during the day, states that he and Frances had a suicide pact. He was to kill her and then himself. He blamed the pact on the fact that Frances was ill treated by her parents at her home and that they were both despondent because of the objection of the girl's parents to their keeping company. Arnwine further states that he and Frances met at 1.30
on the morning of November 13th, drove in his car to the woods at a point about 15 feet from where the body was found. "I then put my arm around her neck, kissed her, and placing the gun beneath her clothing,
shot her through the left breast."

"I love that kid, and she loved me," is what Arnwine said, according to those who heard him make his confession.

Arnwine also told the police that Frances put on her sister's dress because she wanted to look her best,
when found dead.

The confessed murderer says he loved the girl, but lost his nerve when it came to following her in death, as was their arrangement in the alleged pact.

Frances on the night of November 12th retired with the other members of her family. The morning her disappearance was discovered it was found that her alarm clock had been set for 1.30, had rung, and been turned off.

In recounting the manner in which he disposed of the body after the shooting, he says that he carried it to the spot where it was found and covered it with an old mattress which was there. It was so covered when found, with a peach basket for a pillow. The body was well preserved.

Arnwine, says District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, appeared to be relieved after he had confessed to the crime. He smiled as he walked from the district attorney's office and was snapped by newspaper photographers.
He did not appear to be worried when later he was finger-printed in the barracks of the State Police, Doylestown.

Frances disappeared from her home
on Court street, one square from where her confessed murderer resided,
November 13th, according to her parents. Her disappearance was not reported to the authorities until November 22nd. Arnwine was then arrested by Detective Russo and Constable Thomas Crawford upon a serious charge preferred by the girl's father. Taken before Justice of Peace James Langhlin, in the Municipal Building at Bristol, Arnwine there is said to have admitted the charges and confessed that he had been on in-imate terms with the girl. He was held without bail for court.

Thursday, November 24th, Claude White, a hunter, came upon a pair of glasses in the woods. He stuck them into the pocket of his hunting coat and thought no more about them.
Friday he showed them to some friends and then the disappearance of the Rempfer girl was recalled. The glasses were taken to a local optician
and were identified as the kind worn by Frances, as she was afflicted with

AN OMINOUS TREND

Some of the greatest milestones of modern times are marked by the onward march of collectivism. On all sides may be observed a rapid development of paternalism in government which would have been anathema only a few decades ago.

Two states are held as the outstanding examples of collectivism—Soviet Russia and Fascist Italy. In the one aim of elevating state above private rights these otherwise anti-theistic nations meet on common ground.

Other states are little less backward in assuming a collectivist complexion, though in less spectacular fashion. Germany disburses through its various public organs nearly 50 per cent of the national income, or not much less than the Soviet Union, thus standing equally as a silent witness to the decay of individualism.

England, too, has its economic advisory council, its ramified social services, and contains many champions of an industrial subparliament on the German model. Even the division of industry into state-supervised monopolies is proposed. Ten years ago these pioneers would have incurred derision as visionary, almost dangerous, Socialists.

France, often held up as the home of individualism, has recently adopted a state program for supporting workless and aged members of the community. Even the Orient, where formerly government was the antithesis of collectivism, is breaking away from the tradition.

America is the last stronghold of individualism, but even here the theory that neither Federal nor state governments should perform what private agencies might perform as well is losing ground. More and more government is going into business and not even its failures in agriculture and banking have stemmed the tide toward collectivism.

NO MORE INSULATION

There are teeth in the Federal water power act and the Federal Power Commission has shown a determination to use them indiscriminately where the might of utilities runs away with their reason. This must be apparent, by this time, to all companies coming under jurisdiction of the act.

Recent court decisions uphold the regulatory methods of the commission and will encourage it to extend for the protection of the public. With these decisions behind it the commission will supervise utility financing to prevent another Insull bubble. This is for the protection of both the consumer and the investor.

Machinery set up will involve no dual control by Federal and State agencies, but will rather abolish that dangerous twilight zone in which power interests have been given a free hand sometimes to the detriment of consumers and investors.

Judging from the thoroughness with which the commission is going about the enforcement of the mandate given it by Congress the country in the future will be relatively secure against rate gouging and Insull-ating by interstate power enterprises. Nor need this be accomplished at the price of a stunted power development. Proper control will promote rather than stifle initiative in the utility field.

HULMEVILLE

What might have been a serious fire was averted last night at about 10:30, when a blaze was noticed in the garage of Lewis Brunner, by a neighbor, Reginald Webb. Calling assistance, and securing a fire extinguisher, Webb and neighbors soon had the blaze under control. William Penn Fire Company was also summoned. As the owner, who lives next to the garage, was out of town, it was necessary to force an entrance. Origin is undetermined. Approximately $25 damage was done to the framework on the inner portion of the structure.

near-sightedness. The lenses were unusually thick.

Saturday at about 2:30 in the afternoon the finding of the glasses was reported to Detective Russo. He immediately called in the State Police and a posse was organized to search the entire woods. The search had barely gotten under way when Hutchinson found the body.

The corpse lay upon the ground fully clothed, but with the clothing slightly disarranged. The body was well preserved and was taken to the morgue of Stacy B. Brown, Dr. John J. Sweeney, Doylestown, Bucks county coroner, was called and held a post-mortem.

The autopsy proved that the girl had been shot through the left breast, the bullet taking a downward course and lodging to the left of the spine, near the base. The bullet was removed and found to be of 32 caliber. The right eye bore evidence of being jabbed.

The girl was dressed in her sister's clothing, wearing a black satin dress of plain design over a pink slip. She wore a green coat, fur trimmed. There were no bullet holes in any of the clothing, showing that the gun had been fired from beneath the clothing and apparently by someone reaching over the victim's shoulder. The shoes of black patent leather were scarcely soiled.

With this evidence Detective Russo and Corporal John Wommer and Troopers Harold Danbo and Stiles Smith, Morrisville State Police Barracks, began their hunt for the murderer. They conducted a relentless search all night Saturday night and then early Sunday morning went to Doylestown and took Arnwine from jail. He was taken to the morgue and viewed the corpse of his victim and he was taken to the woods where he enacted what he alleged took place on November 13th, but stating that the girl had committed suicide while in his car and that he had then taken the body to the spot where it was found and covered it with the mattress. He told the police that Frances had ended her life with his brother's gun, which he had cleaned after the shooting, reloaded and returned it to a drawer belonging to his brother, Edward. He took them to his home, got the gun for them but still persisted that the girl had taken her own life. While in the woods, Arnwine picked up a pair of gloves which he said belonged to Frances and said they and her glasses had been dropped at the same spot.

Arnwine was then taken to Bristol where he was closely questioned for several hours, each time telling conflicting stories.

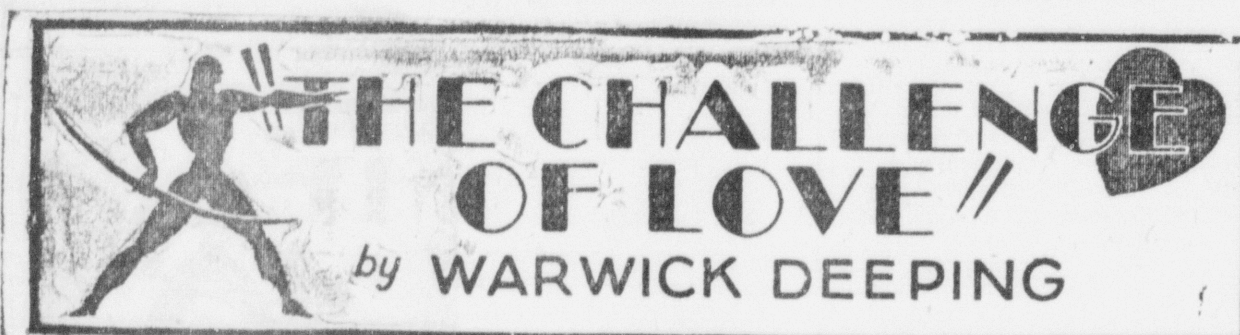

At one o'clock yesterday afternoon the prisoner was taken to the office of District Attorney Arthur M. East-burn, Doylestown, and after questioning he finally made his confession in the presence of District Attorney Eastburn, Assistant District Attorney Belster, Detective Russ, Corporal William Snyder, Doylestown State Police, Corporal John Wommer and Troopers Danbo and Smith.

It appears that the parents of the dead girl endeavored for some time to have Frances cease paying attention to Arnwine. She is said to have promised her father and also the pastor, the M. E. Church that she would continue keeping company with him.

Several notes passing between the two are said to have fallen into the hands of the girl's father. It is reported that one of these along with endearing phrases also told Frances that he was sorry she had been seduced by her father for seeing him. He asked Frances to get her father to tell her the names of the men who had seduced her. "They are rats," he wrote. "I have methods of my own for dealing with them. I go slow, but I will give this old town something to talk about," he is alleged to have written. Then concluding by sending his love he signed the note, "Charles."

The Old Alumnus Listens In!

SYNOPSIS

Sam Perkins, Dr. Montague Threadgold's bottle boy, meets his employer's latest assistant, Dr. John Wolfe on the latter's arrival at little Navestock in a wet winter dusk. Sam notes mentally that the new doctor's luggage is very light as he conducts the stranger to the Threadgold house, where he meets Dr. Threadgold—chubby, sleek, and "the most affable of men." Conducted to his top-story room, Wolfe swiftly recalls his seven years of work and study—how he earned his way by boxing exhibitions as a country fair "bruiser," as a tavern singer, and as a railroad laborer. And now, after all, Wolfe is almost penniless. At dinner, Wolfe impresses Dr. Threadgold's wife as a hungry, "raw hawk of a man . . . silent and sulky." She is talking on medical training and mentions Sir Joshua Kermody, senior physician at Guy's Hospital, as an ideal instructor.

CHAPTER FOUR

Wolfe laid his knife and fork aside by side and looked in his grave, penetrating way at Mrs. Threadgold. He knew old Kermody and his reputation, a man with the tastes and the manners of a Brummell, spruce, bland, and untrustworthy, obsolete in his knowledge, a man who had always refused to accept anything that was new. Kermody was one of the handsomest old snobs in London. He had grand manners and the heart of a cad.

"We have plenty of good men at Guy's, madam."

"I don't doubt it, sir. Sir Joshua has often said that Dr. Threadgold would have been one of the leading physicians in London, if he had dared to stay there. I have no doubt that you will find Dr. Threadgold's experience of infinite service to you. It is good for young men to sit at the feet of experience."

Wolfe's eyes caught the doctor's. "That's what I've come for, sir."

Dr. Threadgold blinked, beamed, and moved uneasily in his chair.

"Ha—one lives and learns, lives and learns. Our responsibilities, Mr. Wolfe, thicken as we grow older. Now, you young men—"

"I think we have more to carry."

"Oh!"

"We have our unmade reputations on our shoulders."

"Ah, that's true."

"Quite a sensible remark, Mr. Wolfe. Montague, perhaps Mr. Wolfe will take a third helping of that sponge custard."

"Allow me, sir."

"Thanks, I will."

It had begun to rain again, and what with the wind blowing the rain full upon the windows and howling through the mulberry trees upon the Green, none of the three at Dr. Threadgold's supper table heard the rattle of a horse's hoofs over the cobbles. The stones gave place to gravel in front of the sententious, red-coated house on the north side of Mulberry Green, and a gig that came swinging round the white posts and chains drew up briskly outside Dr. Threadgold's door. A loafer who had been following the gig at a run, gave a pull at the doctor's door-bell, and set up a tremendous hammering with the lion-headed knocker.

Dr. Threadgold still had the spoon in the dish of sponge custard. "Hallo, hallo, do they want to knock the house down?"

"Montague, if that is old Crabbe's boy, I wish you would box the little wretch's ears. He always makes noise enough for Lord Blackwater's footman."

They heard Sykes, the maid, cross the hall and open the front door. A gust of wind whirled in with the sound of men's voices.

"Confound it, Ruston, don't touch that side of me!"

The door closed again, shutting the voices into Dr. Threadgold's hall.

"This way, sir, please."

"What? Is he in? Deuce take—"

A second door closed on the snarling voice, cutting it off sharply. Sykes came whisking into the dining-room with a scared white face.

"Please, sir, it's Sir George Griggs. He's met with a haccident, sir, untill."

Dr. Threadgold pushed his chair back, put his napkin on the table, and gave his waistcoat a tug, the unconscious gesture that betrayed the professional dignity putting it in order. His prim little mouth straightened into a tighter and more emphatic line.

"Excuse me, my dear."

"Most certainly, Montague."

She turned to Wolfe, who was on the point of rising, and treated him as though he had asked her a question.

"Certainly, Mr. Wolfe. By all means accompany Dr. Threadgold. I know that a young man in your position—"

Wolfe was up, and had given her a slight, stiff bow.

"Go and watch Dr. Threadgold, sir. No doubt you will learn something."

In Dr. Threadgold's consulting room a huge, bullet-headed man in a red coat was striding to and fro from corner to corner, a splash of blood over his left temple, and his left cheek brown with mud. His riding breeches were ripped along one thigh and soaked with mud and slime. The man was like a great beast in pain. He swore—in gusts—as he stamped to and fro, holding his left arm folded across his chest, the right hand under the left elbow.

A younger man stood leaning against the bookcase, looking on rather helplessly, and pulling the points of his brown whiskers.

Dr. Threadgold bustled in with John Wolfe at his heels.

"Come, come, bless my soul! what's all this about?"

The big man turned like an angry bull.

"Matter? Shut that door. I don't want to have the whole house hear me swearing. Swear, confound it, I must."

"My dear Sir George—swear."

"The devil take that new hunter of mine. I'll have the beast shot tomorrow. Played me a dirty trick. What!"

The young man by the bookcase emitted sympathetic language through a cloud of hair. His nose and eyes looked like the beak and eyes of a bird all puffed up with feathers.

"God, sir, never saw a beast refuse more scurvily. I nearly rode over you. Why—"

"Look here, Threadgold—man, something's pretty well messed up. The beast refused at a big ditch, and banged me over his head into an oak stub. We were down Bordon way, ten devilish miles. Thought it would be quicker to drive straight here in Ruston's gig. Confound it! this shoulder kicks like an old duck-gun!"

Threadgold took off his spectacles, wiped them with a silk handkerchief, and replaced them with an air of "now—for business."

"Please sit down, Sir George. You say you fell on your shoulder. That's right, Mr. Wolfe, you might light that other gas jet. Now, sir, I'm afraid we shall have to have your coat off."

Threadgold made little, soothing gestures with his hands.

"Coat off? Of course. But how the—"

"I am afraid, Sir George, we shall have to sacrifice the coat."

"Confound the coat, cut it into ribbons."

"Mr. Wolfe, sir, you will find a pair of scissors in that drawer."

What?"

He found Wolfe standing at his elbow with a sharp-bladed knife.

"Shall I slit the sleeve for you?"

"Please do so, sir."

Wolfe went to work, and peeled the red coat from the injured man by slitting it along the seams. He was very dexterous and very gentle. Sir George watched Wolfe's hands, keeping his jaw set for the moment when the surgeon should hurt him. But Wolfe had the coat off without causing him a pang.

"By jove, that was smart!"

Mr. Ruston of the hairy face chimed in with "Gee, it was, sir."

Wolfe threw the coat aside, slit the baronet's waistcoat across the shoulder, unbuttoned it, handed it to Mr. Ruston, saying, "There's a watch there, I think." Then he dissected away the sleeve of Sir George's shirt, and laid bare the bruised and swollen shoulder.

Threadgold, who had grown rather fidgety, stepped forward and reassumed his authority.

"Thank you, Mr. Wolfe. Now, sir, we will see what is the matter."

Wolfe drew aside and watched Dr. Threadgold make his examination. His first impressions had tempted him to mistrust the little man's ability, nor had he watched Dr. Threadgold's chubby hands for half a minute before he knew him for a fumbler and no surgeon. A craftsman is very quick in judging a fellow craftsman, and Threadgold was fussy, ineffectual, and uncertain with his hands. He chattered half to himself and half to his patient, with the busy self-consciousness of a man of poor capacity.

His hands gave Wolfe the impression of not being quite sure of what they ought to do next. There was no decisive, diagnostic intelligence about them. Moreover, Threadgold caused the big man a great deal of unnecessary pain.

"Acromion process—hum—exactly. Clavicle a little bit up—perhaps. Swelling very pronounced, very pronounced—"

Sir George writhed.

"Confound it, Threadgold."

"One moment, sir. I assure you—"

"How much longer do you want to mess me about?"

Threadgold patted the swollen joint, looked wise and sympathetic, and glanced at Wolfe.

"Support Sir George's arm, Mr. Wolfe."

He pursed up his lips, and frowned over the gold rims of his glasses. Wolfe had a shrewd suspicion that Dr. Threadgold was none the wiser than when he began.

"There is a great deal of swelling there, Sir George, a very great deal of swelling. I should prefer to have the injured part rested, ice applied, and a second examination made tomorrow."

The big man stared.

"What! You don't mean to say—"

"My dear sir, in a case such as this, when some hours have elapsed—"

"Oh, bosh, man, I want the thing settled. Do you mean to say I've driven ten miles—for nothing? You've pulled me about enough—"

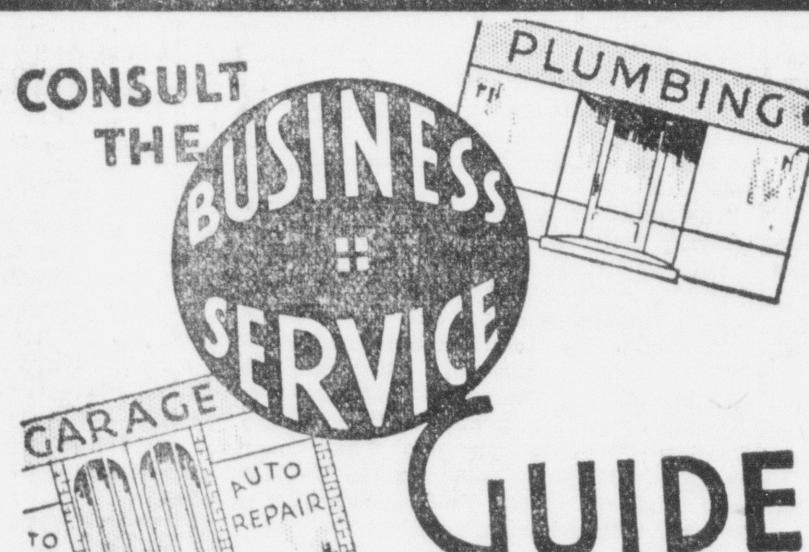

Dr. Threadgold went very pink.

"My dear Sir George, let me assure you that a diagnosis can only be hypothetical under such conditions."

The baronet looked ugly. He was one of those plethoric, short-tempered men who lose all self-restraint under the influence of pain or of much provocation. He stared hard at Threadgold, and then turned his bristling eyebrows toward Wolfe, who was supporting the arm.

FOOT HEALTH ARCH SUPPORT

—by—
WILLIAM A. GROFF
Foot Specialist 329 Radcliffe St.

The time will come and must come, when the law must become cognizant of the facts that a metal arch support grips the surface of the sole of the plantar surface of the foot and presses upon the underlying structures. At every step, it acts as a clamp-splint and does not allow the muscles to act; they cannot functionate, and thus atrophy. The parts are clamped and locked so that the muscles can neither expand nor contract in any direction. In this way, the muscles involved waste away from disuse. The only use that a metal arch support has is when an individual's arches have fallen from exceedingly overweight, and then only as a last resort. Any individual who follows a reputable foot specialist's advice, will not have to be troubled with metal arch supports, which not only distort the shape of the shoes and produces callouses upon the sole of the foot, but tires the individual upon walking a considerable distance. A notable orthopedic surgeon of New York recently said, "Give me a healthy individual with a perfect and normal arch, and within nine months he will have flat feet from wearing metal arch supports."—(Adv.)

SPORTS ST. ANN'S WINS OVER FRANKFORD TRIANGLES

Capture Fifth Victory of The Season, Winning 14 to 0

WAS AN EASY VICTORY

St. Ann's A. A. won its fifth victory of the season yesterday afternoon on Sullivan's field, defeating the Frankford Triangles, 14-0.

It was an easy victory for the "Saints" who gained through the visitors' line at will and probably would have had several other touchdowns if the time of the periods was not shortened.

The only offensive power of the invaders came in the last five minutes of play when a drive brought the ball to the ten yard line. A pass brought the oval to the three yard line but the St. Ann's line was equal to the task and the game ended with the pigskin on the one yard line.

The first six-pointer of the fray came in the second quarter. The Purple and Gold worked the ball from their own twenty yard line to the visitors' ten yard line. A penalty for off-sides brought the ball back to the fifteen yard line. From here Quici sprinted around left end and behind wonderful interference scored. Tershon scored the extra point on an other end run.

A pass, E. Spadaccino to Tershon, who raced fifty yards to score, accounted for the second touchdown. Tershon had no trouble in outdistancing the Triangle players chasing him. The extra point was successful on an end run by Spadaccino.

The St. Ann's line again failed to crack and most of the yardage gained by the Frankford boys was by forward passing. Very little yardage was made through the powerful line of the "Saints."

Cold weather held down the attendance and the poorest crowd of the season was on hand to see the locals chalk up their fifth victory against four defeats.

The line-up:

St. Ann's	Frankford
Esposito	Hassett
F. Seneca	left end Johnson
Oriola	left guard Hentz
J. Spadaccino	center Kegan
Kornstedt	right guard Scott
Tulio	right tackle Shamokin
Pleo	right end Bednar
Quici	left half back Jno. Boyle
Tershon	right half back Jas. Boyle
D. Seneca	quarter back Kasel
	full back

Score by periods:
St. Ann's 0 7 7 0-14
Frankford 0 0 0 0-0
Touchdowns: Quici, Tershon.
Points after touchdowns: Tershon.
E. Spadaccino.
Substitutions for St. Ann's: Morino for Kornstedt, Angelo for J. Spadaccino, E. Spadaccino for Quici, Misera for Pleo, Juno for Oriola, Conti for Esposito.
Referee: Walsh.
Umpire: Conca.
Head linesman: Pearson.

HIBERNIANS TO MEET THE PAPER MAKERS

Two games are carded for tonight in the Italian Mutual Aid Hall as the second round of the teams of the Bristol Basketball League gets under way. Each team has seen action and now the mixing up starts.

In the first game, the Hibernians meet the Paterson Parchment Paper Company. Both of these clubs won their first tilt on Friday night. In the second game, the Odd Fellows will meet the Bristol Hawks. Neither of these clubs have yet scored a victory.

The "Hibbies" will have the following for their starting line-up: "Glee" Dougherty, "Gene" Lawler, "Eddie" Roe, "Huby" Brady, and John Dougherty. For Paterson, "Pete" Minkema, "Pete" Paletta, "Hun" Rodgers, Jack Chase and Miller will probably start.

The Hawks, who lost their first game by two points, are out for revenge, and expect to take it at the expense of the Odd Fellows. The Odd Fellows also would like to break in the win column and feel confident of taking over the Hawks.

In the first round, which ended Friday night, the Hibernians, Paterson Parchment, Y. M. A. and the Bristol Aces turned in victories.

Tap-off for tonight's first game is listed for eight o'clock sharp.

U. S. ACTRESS IS LEADING SPONSOR OF DOTTED VEIL

By Alice Langellier (L. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS—(INS)—The many manufactured mediocrities found in the usual Paris art Salon are missing from the new Salon des Surindépendants recently opened at the Porte de Versailles.

These very, very independent artists are showing honest and interesting work at this exhibition which is always a notable art event in Paris, and one gets the impression that there is a revival of good painting at hand and certainly a return to sanity. Despite their exciting claim to Superindependence, the pictures on view here could not possibly shock nor bewilder a good French bourgeois. Many are animated with new ideas and youth which takes one back to the days of early "Fauvism," when art rebels really began to revolutionize all plastic art.

In most of the paintings the color is of unusual quality, distributed in broad areas with fine luminous effects. Expressive fluid lines, which in some parts are sharply incisive in defining the different forms, are also characteristic of these artists. The whole formation of the tableau is managed so that the spectator immediately feels an aerial atmosphere of space composition.

The crowds which pushed through the big hall on the opening day looked for the man who might become the Manet or the Renoir of the future. Based on the principle of "no jury, no prizes, no sales bureau," this Salon has the possibility of contributing very much to the art of today. Whistler and Manet, years ago, exhibited their works at its counterpart, known then as the "Salon des Refuses."

John Xceron, of Washington, D. C., and New York, is among the very, very independents, showing some interesting work with unusual linear movements. Benjamin Greenstein (Benno), also of New York City, is exhibiting for the first time in the Superindependants. In all his pictures he displays fine feeling and sensibility of form.

Other Americans showing interesting work are Stanley W. Havter, Horation Butler, Flora Crockett, Elizabeth Blair and Dalia Husband.

Washington's Boy Leader

By HARDIN BURNLEY

JOE CRONIN

WONDERFUL SHORTSTOP OF THE WASHINGTON TEAM WHO WILL SUCCEED WALTER JOHNSON AS THE SENATORS' PILOT NEXT YEAR!

IM THE NEW MANAGER

YA LOOK LIKE THE BATBOY

JOE IS THE YOUNGEST MANAGER IN THE MAJORS.

SPORT BUG.

THE youngest man ever to manage a big league baseball club—Joe Cronin, new leader of the Senators—is looking forward eagerly to his first season as Washington's pilot. Joe, who is just 26 years old and is generally conceded to be the best of modern shortstops, was named by Clark Griffith to succeed the Senator's former manager, Walter Johnson, shortly after the 1932 season was ended.

Now, to manage the Washington Senators, with an exacting critic like Clark Griffith as your boss, is assuredly no easy task for the most experienced of baseball men; and for a young man of Cronin's age, without any managerial experience, it is a very tough assignment.

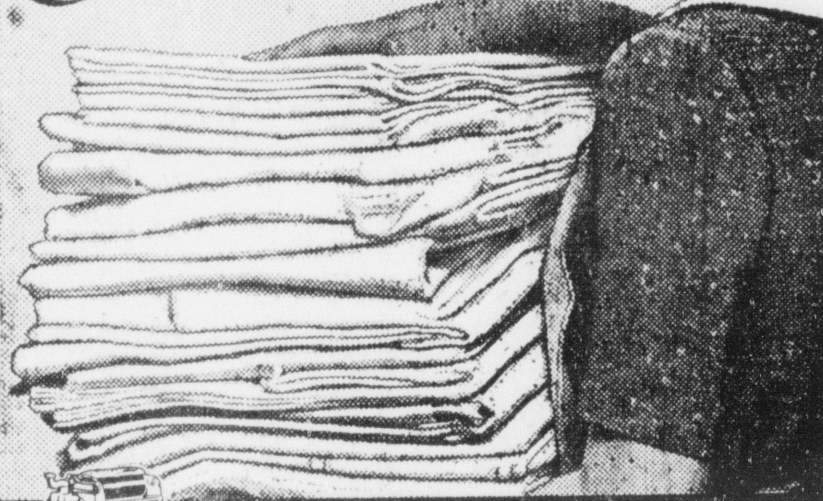

Cronin isn't worrying about the troubles which inevitably accompany a managerial job, however. Joe has plenty of confidence in his ability to make good and he is raring to go. Just now he is getting into condition for the tough siege ahead, and is trying to get in the best shape possible in order to withstand successfully the double strain of being a player-manager.

Cronin is very ambitious and has plenty of fighting spirit. They do say that last season he had a squabble with big Al Simmons, the former Philadelphia outfielder now with Chicago, and Fighting Joe chased Simmons to the bench, refusing to take him on in a scrap. Big-Simmons is said to have refused to engage in a fistfighting party with Joseph, however.

Although Cronin has proved himself to be a fighter on the ball field, Joe says he will be an easy boss

"I get a real thrill from this new kind of Economy"

"Having a Maytag is just like getting an extra allowance for clothes. The money saving is so much greater than I thought it would be. It's so easy to do the washing. My things are always immaculate. And they last so much longer."

Of course there's a thrill in saying the Maytag way. Thousands of women have found that a Maytag quickly pays for itself—then keeps on paying dividends in better washings for less money. It's true that because of its extra, built-in quality, the Maytag provides the lowest cost per washing of any washer.
